Mr. Roosevelt on State Constitutions.

Is there any subject which interests his share the mind of man upon which Mr. Turo-DORE ROOSEVELT does not deem himself pens to find himself for the time being?

quite so far West as Arizons and New Mexico; but being within hailing distance of those Territories he thought fit to advise their people in reference to their new Constitutions. Under the enabling act passed by the last Congress a State Constitution. This matter is naturally the paramount subject of interest at the present time in each Territory, and Mr. ROOSEVELT being in the neighborhood apparently felt bound to contribute to the discussion as to the proper contents of a Constitution "1 wish that I could go down to New Mexico and Arizona," he said at Pueblo, "but this is the nearest place to them that I will reach on this trip. There is one point upon which I would like to advise them, and that is to make their Constitutions easy of amendment at any time when the people feel they should be amended." After declaring that doctrinaires and also designing corporation atterneys often succeed in putting into Constitutions matters which are not thoroughly understood by the people. he went on to say: "My plea is that the people of the new States should be free. so that if at any time they find that something has been put, into their Constitutions which they did not know was there, or if they find out that something is working badly which they believed would work well they shall have the opportunity to easily make any change
